It Really Could Happen: Blur's Dave Rowntree Gazes Into Space

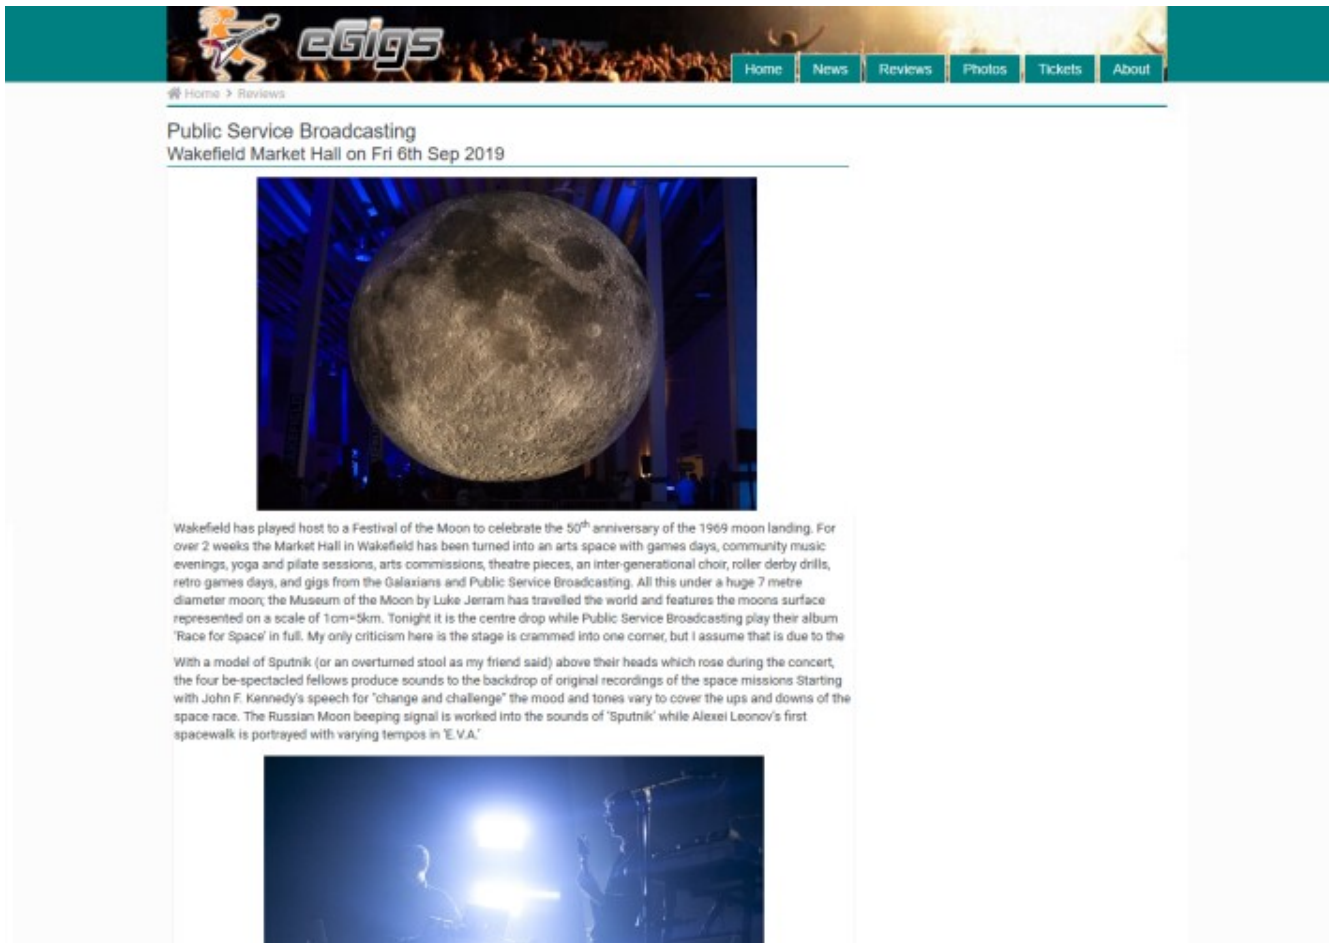

On Beagle 2, Britpop's legacy, and where Blur might go next...

Dave Rowntree isn't keen to dwell on the past. He's proud of his achievements, sure, but it's not something that engulfs him. Drummer with Blur, Labour councillor in Norfolk, and a keen amateur astronomer – his plate, it seems, is pretty damn full.

Wakefield Market Hall on Fri 6th Sep 2019

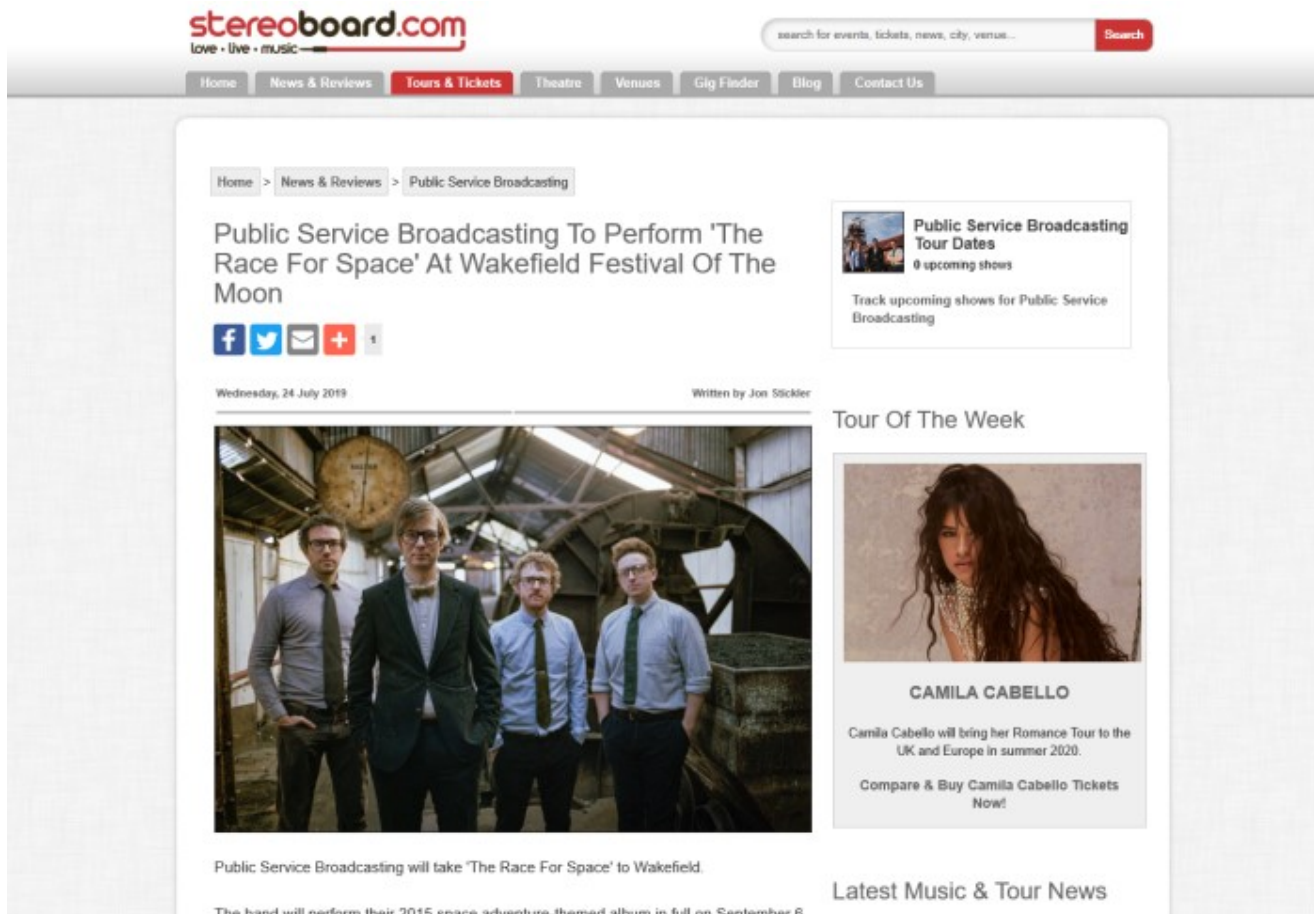

Wakefield has played host to a Festival of the Moon to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the 1969 moon landing. For over 2 weeks the Market Hall in Wakefield has been turned into an arts space with games days, community music evenings, yoga and pilate sessions, arts commissions, theatre pieces, an inter-generational choir, roller derby drills, retro games days, and gigs from the Galaxians and Public Service Broadcasting. All this under a huge 7 metre diameter moon, the Museum of the Moon by Luke Jerram has travelled the world and features the moons surface represented on a scale of 1cm=5km. Tonight it is the centre drop while Public Service Broadcasting play their album 'Race for Space' in full. My only criticism here is the stage is crammed into one corner, but I assume that is due to the

With a model of Sputnik (or an overturned stool as my friend said) above their heads which rose during the concert, the four be-spectacled fellows produce sounds to the backdrop of original recordings of the space missions Starting with John F. Kennedy's speech for "change and challenge" the mood and tones vary to cover the ups and downs of the space race. The Russian Moon beeping signal is worked into the sounds of 'Sputnik' while Alexei Leonov's first spacewalk is portrayed with varying tempos in 'E.V.A.'
